

Fleur't

Grand opening

THERE'S A FLIRTY new boutique in the Valley delivering high style with sleek fashions and a chic decor.

Co-owners Stefano Lawani and Kori Davidson opened Fleur't (pronounced flirt) in November at Gainey Village in Scottsdale.

They are the former owners of Blush, which is now closed. Their new store offers a wider variety of apparel for men and women and more couture lines, along with a few home decor items.

"It's romance, decadence and chic," Davidson says when describing the boutique. "We're all about bling here."

"We also wanted space and an energetic kind of flow with the ability to shop by yourself while meandering around the store," Lawani adds.

The lavish boutique has the appearance of a renovated warehouse with a French-inspired theme, blending Old World charm with contemporary flair.

With concrete floors, exposed ceiling vents and track lighting, the boutique is accented with luxurious trimmings including miniature topiaries, crystal chandeliers and chocolate-colored velvet curtains drawn back with fringe ties.

Toward the rear of the boutique, sheer mauve drapes open to unveil a vanity room furnished with two oversize armoires filled with fragrances and lingerie and a wall-to-wall mirrored vanity table covered in beauty accoutrements, reminiscent of an old Hollywood siren's dressing room.

tive touches is its fabric-lined shopping bags with one of the many Fleur't tips printed inside, such as, "Look over your shoulder at him" or "Treat her gently," as well as Fleur'tune cookies placed in each customer's bag with similar sayings.

The boutique carries a host of exclusive lines including Prada Denim, Great China Wall, Philipp Plein and Ilaria Nistri.

They also offer a signature line of cosmetics.

At the denim bar, clients can customize their gear: Denim can be bejeweled or distressed, and caps and T-shirts can be bedazzled. Customers are invited to bring in their own items and have unique designs added as well.
